Dr. Ava John-Baptiste

Ava John-Baptiste is an assistant professor in the Department of Anesthesia & Perioperative Medicine, in the Schulich School of Medicine and Dentistry at Western University. She is also a health economist in the Centre for Medical Evidence, Decision Integrity and Clinical Impact (MEDICI). The MEDICI unit supports health policy decision making at the London hospitals (London Health Sciences Center, St. Joseph’s Healthcare London) and the Southwestern Ontario Local Health Integration Network (LHIN). Through MEDICI, Dr. John-Baptiste collaborates with a broad range of clinicians and scientists on initiatives to appraise the safety, effectiveness and cost-effectiveness of health technologies. In addition to applied health policy projects, she is interested in methodological research on health technology assessment in the hospital setting. Dr. John-Baptiste teaches in the Schulich Interfaculty Program in Public Health and in the Department of Epidemiology and Biostatistics.
